

Regia Policy Document
‘Personally Recommended Suppliers’ Does Not Infer ‘Regia Approved’

I'd like to make it clear that Regia Anglorum does not have - nor will it have - a list of "approved suppliers" on either side of the Atlantic or anywhere else. An official recommendation carries with it an implied liability and I'm afraid that in these litigious days, that is a cross we cannot be persuaded to bear.

This is not to say that myself or other Regia officers will not make recommendations, of course we do. These are based upon feedback and experience, from handling the product of someone's expertise whether it be a pot or sword, box or shield, cloth or spearhead. But a personal recommendation is not the same as a blanket approval for the products from one supplier. We could separately and severally cite cases where a supplier has started out with the best of intentions & got so snowed under they have simply up-sticks and vanished! In other cases, a dealer has decided to buy in stock from India or China & started supplying it under their name with predictable results.

So, Regia Anglorum does not make blanket recommendations and we certainly don't have a list of approved suppliers.

J.K. Siddorn,
Eolder, Regia Anglorum